Fifth Explorer Rocket Fails To Reach Orbit

Satellite Sends Back No Signals

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Aug. 24. (UPI)—An Army Jupiter C rocket was blasted off into space early today with a new explorer satellite designed to find out how long man can live in space—but the baby "moon" failed to orbit.

The tube-shaped satellite, designated Explorer V, blazed into a star-lit sky at 11:17 P.D.T., and a spokesman said the four-stage Jupiter C launcher "appeared to function normally."

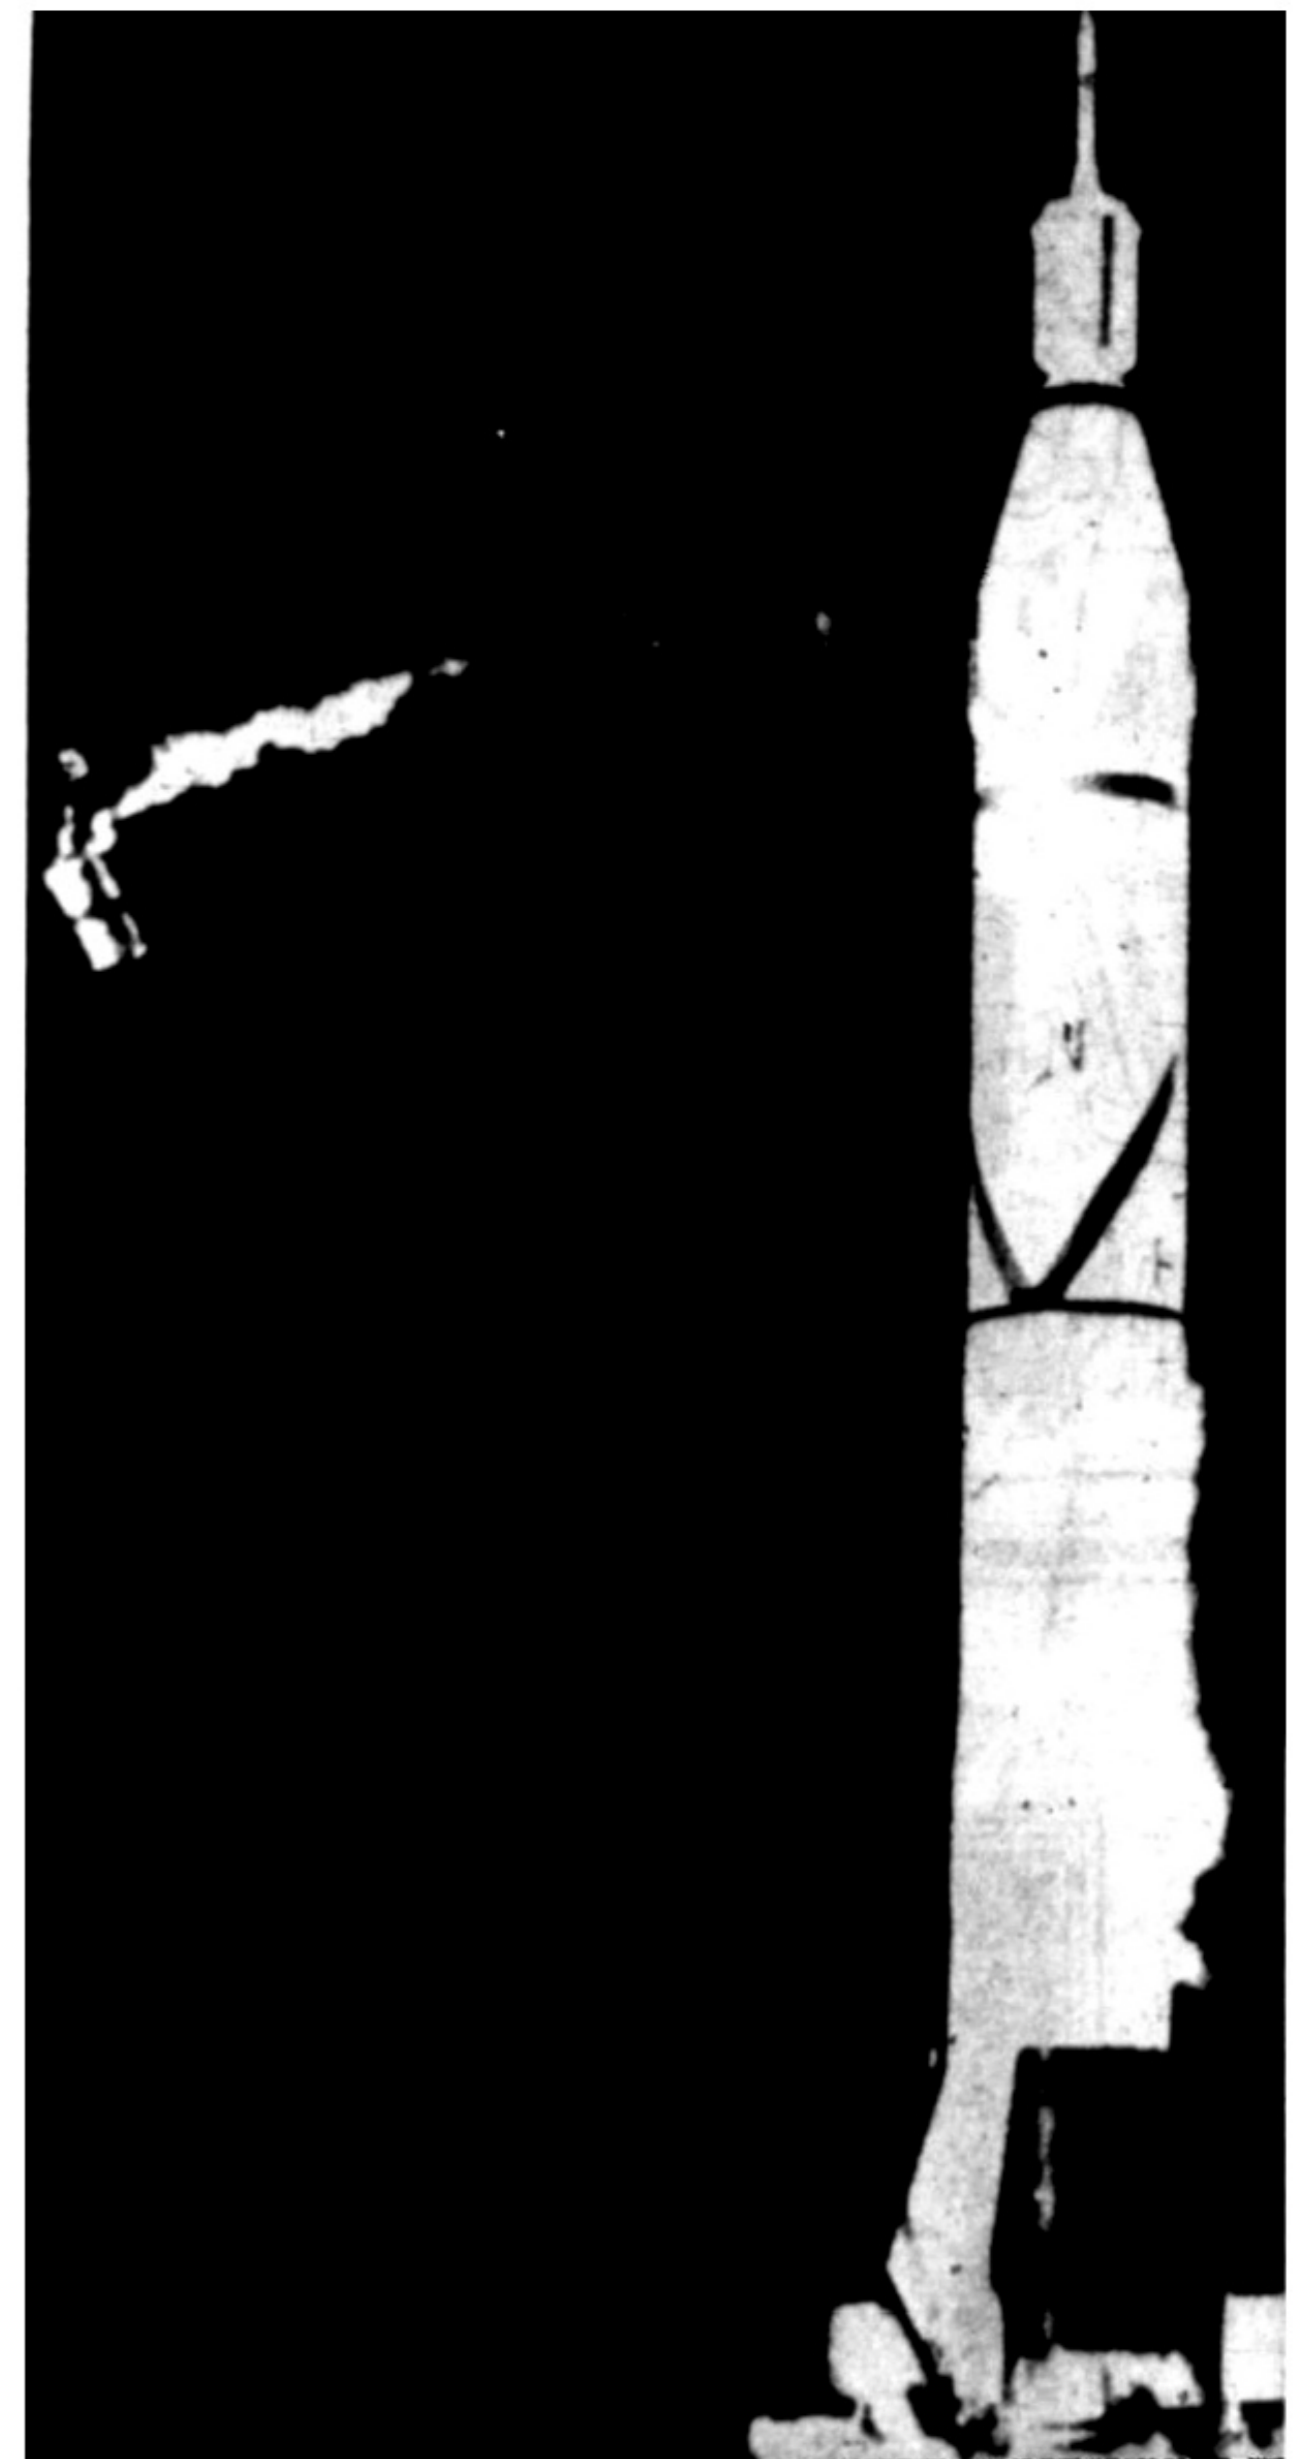

However, three-and-a-half hours after the rocket soared aloft, an Army spokesman in Washington said there were no further reports of signals from Explorer V after the first few minutes of flight.

"Not Around Earth"
"The satellite did not achieve an orbit around the earth," the Pentagon spokesman said. He added it would be necessary for army missilemen to "go through all reports and data" to determine the cause of the failure.

"Everyone was mystified," a source close to the Explorer project said. "Apparently the trouble was in one of the upper stages, but it will be at least a day or two before we can find out what happened."

The new satellite's mission was to take a more accurate reading of the recently-discovered radiation band which threatens to delay manned space travel. It was equipped with highly sensitive counters to measure radiation above the earth's surface.

Brig. Gen. John Barclay, commander of the Army ballistic missile agency at Huntsville, Ala., told newsmen it was possible the new artificial "moon" had gone into orbit, but that its radioes may have failed.

Aimed At Higher Apogee
Barclay said the apogee or high point in the satellite's orbit would have been farther away from the earth than its predecessors in space. This apparently would have enabled the new baby "moon" to probe areas previously not investigated.

George Ludwig, University of Iowa scientist who designed the instruments for the Explorers, said Explorer IV had sent back information showing that an unshielded human in space would be subjected to a lethal dose of radiation.

The new satellite's mission, Ludwig said, was to find out whether the radiation particles were protons or electrons. Both are part of the atom structure, he said, but if the radiation consisted of protons, a human space voyager could absorb enough in four-and-a-half hours to kill him.
